LEARNING HOW TO MAK SLIME !

Every child wants to make slime these days and that's because it's just such a cool activity to try! Did you know that making slime is awesome science too. The STEM team wanted students to get more out of their slime making experience, and turned it into a science experiment and applied a little bit of the science method! Here's what happened:

- The students had to figure out a question they wanted to answer about the slime.

- They had to do some research.
- They gathered the supplies.
- The students conducted the science experiments.
- Gathered the data and looked at the results.
- Drew their own conclusion and saw if it answered their question!

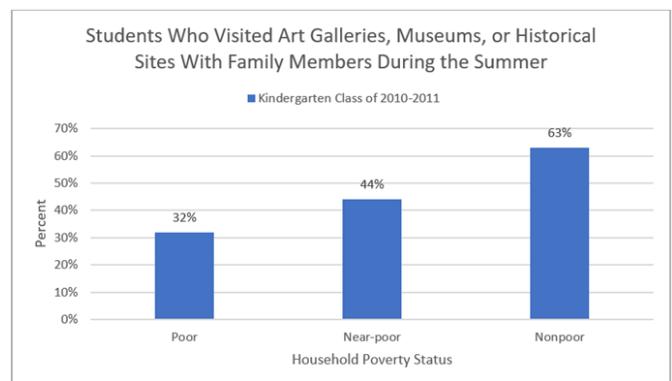

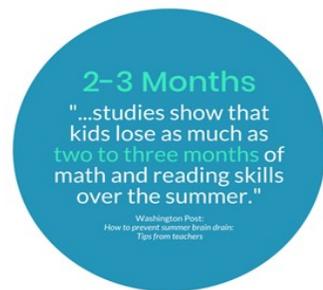

If you would like for your kid to become involved in STEM — science, technology, engineering and math later in life, start exposing them to fun science at an young age. It's never too early to get your kids interested in the world of science.

Preventing the Summer Slide

This summer let's avoid the summer slide by keeping our students involved. Did you know research shows that reading just six books during the summer may keep a struggling reader from regressing? Students do not have to slip or slide during the summer. To be successful in school and life, children need continuing opportunities to learn. Summer Reading Club are a wonderful way to reminds kids that reading is for fun—as well as for learning. Below are several ideas to help avoid the summer slide.

- Read every day. Try reading together when possible.
- Make reading fun! Take your child to museums, parks, and other exciting places.
- Encourage your child to read 20 minutes every day.
- Unplug from technology
- Check the local Library for the summer reading schedule.

4 Ways to Get Your Child Ready for Kindergarten

While some kindergarten-bound children feel anxious about the first day of school, many others can't wait to start. During the summer before they begin kindergarten, their feelings usually amplify, leaving parents wondering how exactly they should spend the last summer before school starts in order to prepare them.

1. Familiarize yourself with the school

Many schools offer opportunities for parents and students to tour their facilities, so take advantage of them. Some even offer a sort of "kindergarten training" the week before classes begin. Besides checking out the classroom, don't forget to visit other areas your student will be using, such as the cafeteria, restrooms, playgrounds, offices, etc.

2. Practice basic skills

A common fear among students and parents is that they simply aren't ready for school, no matter the grade. To combat these feelings, practice the skills your student will need now, from knowing the alphabet to being able to write his name to basic counting.

3. Learn independence

Having your child start kindergarten can make you feel a little overprotective and overwhelmed. You'll both need to learn to operate independently. For you, this will mean letting go a bit and helping her reason through things on her own. For your child, it will mean figuring out how to navigate situations without the immediate aid of a parent. To begin, practice solving problems at home by allowing your child to take an active role in the discussion.

4. Find joy in learning

Nurture your child's sense of wonder by making learning fun so he won't fear school. When you work together to find joy in the small steps of the academic process, you're fostering a lifelong love for learning. But remember that your student is still young coming on too strong will have the opposite effect.
